Passengers warned of train delays for signal works

Rail passengers are being warned signal upgrades in south London are expected to cause delays for a week.

No trains will run on parts of the National Rail and London Overground from 26 October to 1 November, the same time as the half-term school holidays.

The £400m investment works will take place between Crystal Palace, Tulse Hill and Peckham Rye.

Thameslink, Southern and London Overground trains will be affected.

Rory O'Neill, Transport for London's general manager for London Overground, said: "Major investment in modern signalling is key to ensuring we can continue to offer a safe and reliable service while maintaining sufficient capacity to meet the growing demand for our services.

"There will also be some weekend closures in the same area before and after the October half-term closure."

Previous system amendments between East Croydon and London Victoria in 2022 saw signalling related delays cut by more than a half with rail operators hoping for the same success this round.
